

Legend of the Latte

By Larry and Leslie Latour

Now I'll tell you of a story that will scare you to the core.
it's about what it would be like if there wasn't any more.
It's the latte that I speak of, brought from somewhere up above.
You know a man, with his latte, there IS no truer love

If He didn't have his Latte there would sure be hell to pay.
He would lose all his incentive & his mind would go astray
If he didn't have his Latte he'd be only singin' blues.
is it decafe or the mocha? Bet I know what he would choose.

Cause there's something very special in the bottom of that cup.... (oh yeah)
Something dreamy something steamy, makes you want to drink it up.
To deny a man his Latte might be grounds to start a war
Just imagine where we could be if there wasn't anymore.

What confusion & delusion, if the Latte land shut down,
People jumping from their windows with an empty hollow sound
In a world where once was happiness, the pain of lack would show.
God the coffeeshop is EMPTY! Just where have they to go?!

So let's try to keep it perkin', cause a man can't go without.
and the joy of havin' Latte is good reason still to.... sh (out?)...
Surrreeee...there's something very special in the bottom of that cup.
Something dreamy something steamy, makes you want to drink it up.

For society that's Latteless should never have to be.
So there's the Legend of the Latte,
for everyone to... s(ee?)

Sure there's something very special in the bottom of that cup... (oh yeah)
Something dreamy something steamy, you just want to drink it ...up.
